HOW STATES STILL ALLOW DEBT COLLECTORS TO PUSH FAMILIES INTO POVERTY

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Every state has a set of exemption laws, intended to prevent creditors from pushing consumers and their families into destitution. Exemption laws preserve basic items of property from seizure by creditors so that consumers can continue to work productively and support themselves and their families. These laws are intended to protect at least subsistence wages and essential property, such as a car and home, from seizure by creditors.

States have good reason to be concerned about protecting their residents from over-aggressive collection of judgments for consumer debts. The growing wealth gap strains families to the breaking point and the growth of the debt buyer industry makes them increasingly vulnerable to seizure of essential wages and property.

This report surveys the exemption laws of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. Despite the importance of state exemption laws, this report finds that not one jurisdiction meets five basic standards:

- Preventing debt collectors from seizing so much of the debtor's wages that the debtor is pushed below a living wage;
- Allowing the debtor to keep a used car of at least average value;
- Preserving the family's home—at least a median-value home;
- Preserving at least $3,000 in a bank account so that the debtor has minimal funds to pay such essential costs as rent, utilities, and commuting expenses; and
- Preventing seizure and sale of the debtor's necessary household goods.

Best states: Massachusetts, which modernized its archaic exemption laws in 2010, and Nevada, which also recently improved its laws, come closest to meeting these five basic standards, each rating a high "B" grade. Solid "B" states include Texas, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. New York, Oklahoma, and South Carolina rate low "B" grades. Kansas, North Dakota, and Wisconsin each rated a high "C."

Worst states: At the opposite end of the scale are several states whose exemption laws reflect indifference to struggling debtors. These states allow debt collectors to seize nearly everything a debtor owns, even the minimal items necessary for the debtor to continue working and providing for a family. Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, Michigan, New Jersey, and Utah are the worst and rate an "F." Meanwhile, Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Maryland, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and Wyoming are nearly as bad, rating a "D-."

PROTECTIONS FOR FAMILY FINANCES

Key Recommendations for States

State exemption laws should:

- Preserve the debtor’s ability to work, by protecting a working car, work tools and equipment, and money for commuting and other daily work expenses.
- Protect the family’s housing, necessary household goods, and means of transportation.
- Protect a living wage for working debtors—a wage that can meet basic needs and maintain a safe, decent standard of living within the community.
- Protect a reasonable amount of money on deposit so that debtors can pay commuting costs and upcoming bills such as rent, daycare, and utility bills.
- Protect retirees from destitution by restricting creditors’ ability to seize retirement funds.
- Be automatically updated for inflation.
- Close loopholes that enable some lenders to evade exemption laws. For example, states that allow payday lending enable these lenders to evade state laws that protect wages and exempt benefits from creditors. States that allow lenders to take household goods as collateral enable these lenders to avoid state protections of household goods.
- Be self-enforcing to the extent possible, so that the debtor does not have to file complicated papers or attend court hearings.

Model language for states to achieve these goals is provided in the National Consumer Law Center’s Model Family Financial Protection Act, available at www.nclc.org/mffpa The model law also includes steps that states can take to reduce the pervasive abuse of the court system by debt buyers. Seizure of debtors’ wages and property would not be such a problem if debt buyers did not churn out such an endless stream of judgments on old, poorly documented debts – many of them not even owed.

By updating their exemption laws, states can prevent debt buyers from reducing families to poverty. These protections also benefit society at large, by keeping workers in the work force, helping families stay together, and reducing the demand on funds for unemployment compensation and social services.
